The Causes of the War

The Hundred Years' War was caused by a complex web of factors, including:

- The rivalry between England and France for control of the Duchy of Aquitaine
- The disputed succession to the French throne
- The growth of English nationalism

- The rise of the French monarchy

The Course of the War

The Hundred Years' War was a long and brutal conflict, fought on land and sea. The war began in 1337 and lasted until 1453. It was fought in three phases:

1. The Edwardian War (1337-1360)
2. The Caroline War (1369-1389)
3. The Lancastrian War (1415-1453)

The war was marked by a number of major battles, including:

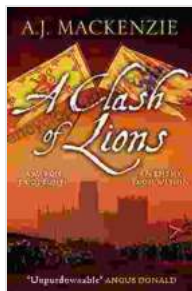

- The Battle of Crecy (1346)
- The Battle of Poitiers (1356)
- The Battle of Agincourt (1415)
- The Battle of Orleans (1429)

The Consequences of the War

The Hundred Years' War had a profound impact on both England and France. The war weakened the English monarchy and led to the growth of Parliament. In France, the war led to the consolidation of the French monarchy and the emergence of a national identity.

The Hundred Years' War also had a significant impact on European history. The war helped to shape the political map of Europe and contributed to the rise of the nation-state.

Clash of Lions: The Hundred Years' War is a masterful account of one of the most important conflicts in European history. This definitive history is a must-read for anyone interested in medieval history, military history, or the history of England and France.
