

Letters From Japanese American Children To The Librarian They Left Behind: A Touching Testament to Resilience and Hope

An to a Heartfelt Collection

In the midst of the turmoil and uncertainty of World War II, a remarkable story unfolded at the Manzanar War Relocation Center, one of ten internment camps where Japanese Americans were forcibly relocated after the signing of Executive Order 9066. Among the thousands of internees at Manzanar was a group of children who found solace and inspiration in the words of their beloved librarian, Miss Stella Gentry.

When the children were forced to leave Manzanar and relocate to other internment camps, they penned heartfelt letters to Miss Gentry, expressing their gratitude for her dedication and the power of books in their lives. These letters, now collected in the poignant volume "Letters From Japanese American Children To The Librarian They Left Behind," offer a unique and moving glimpse into the experiences of Japanese American children during this challenging time.
