Tenerife is the largest and most populous island in the Canary Islands. It is home to Mount Teide, the highest peak in Spain. Tenerife is a popular destination for hikers and nature lovers, and it offers a wide range of activities, from swimming and sunbathing to windsurfing and paragliding.

La Palma is a smaller island that is known for its lush forests and beautiful waterfalls. It is a popular destination for hikers and birdwatchers. La Palma is also home to the Roque de los Muchachos, a volcanic peak that offers stunning views of the island.

La Gomera is a small island that is known for its dramatic cliffs and deep ravines. It is a popular destination for hikers and nature lovers. La Gomera is also home to the Garajonay National Park, a UNESCO World Heritage Site.

El Hierro is the smallest and least populated island in the Canary Islands. It is a popular destination for hikers and divers. El Hierro is also home to the La Restinga Marine Reserve, a protected area that is home to a variety of marine life.

Geography

The Canary Islands are located in the Atlantic Ocean, off the coast of Africa. They are part of the Macaronesian region, which also includes the Azores, Madeira, and the Cape Verde Islands.

The Canary Islands are volcanic in origin, and they are characterized by their rugged terrain. Tenerife is the largest island, with an area of 2,034 square kilometers. El Hierro is the smallest island, with an area of 268 square kilometers.

The Canary Islands have a subtropical climate, with average temperatures ranging from 18°C to 24°C. The islands are known for their sunshine, with an average of over 300 days of sunshine per year.

History

The Canary Islands were first inhabited by the Guanches, an indigenous people who arrived on the islands around 200 BC. The Guanches were conquered by the Spanish in the 15th century, and the islands became part of the Spanish Empire.

The Canary Islands played an important role in the Spanish conquest of the Americas. Christopher Columbus stopped at the islands on his way to the New World, and he used them as a base for his expeditions.

The Canary Islands became a popular tourist destination in the 19th century. The islands were known for their mild climate and beautiful scenery, and they attracted visitors from all over Europe.

Culture

The Canary Islands have a rich and diverse culture. The islands were influenced by a variety of cultures, including the Spanish, the Guanches, and the Portuguese.

The Canary Islands are known for their traditional music and dance. The islands are also home to a number of festivals, including the Carnival of Santa Cruz de Tenerife, which is one of the largest carnivals in the world.

The Canary Islands are also home to a number of historical sites, including the Castillo de San Felipe in Tenerife and the Iglesia de San Juan Bautista in La Palma.
